Ken Klippenstein

Subscribe Sign in

FBI Making List of American “Extremists,” Leaked Memo Reveals

Are you on Trump's naughty list?

KEN KLIPPENSTEIN
DEC 06, 2025

738 34 293 Share

They’re making a list, they’re checking it twice

We publish documents other media won’t. For more leaks and to make it so I can keep doing this work, please become a paid subscriber.

Type your email... Subscribe

Attorney General Pam Bondi is ordering the FBI to “compile a list of groups or entities engaging in acts that may constitute domestic terrorism,” according to a Justice Department memo published here exclusively.

The target is those expressing “opposition to law and immigration enforcement; extreme views in favor of mass migration and open borders; adherence to radical gender ideology,” as well as “anti-Americanism,” “anti-capitalism,” and “anti-Christianity.”

Bondi Memo On Countering Domestic Terrorism And Organized Political Violence
151KB • PDF file
Download

That language echoes the so-called indicators of terrorism identified by President

Trump's directive National Security Presidential Memorandum-7, or NSPM-7, which the memo says it's intended to implement. Where NSPM-7 was a declaration of war on just about anyone who isn't MAGA, this is the war plan for how the government will wage it on a tactical level.

In addition to compiling a list of undesirables, Bondi directs the FBI to enhance the capabilities (and publicity) of its tipline in order to more aggressively solicit tips from the American public on, well, other Americans. To that end, Bondi also directs the FBI to establish "a cash reward system" for information leading to identification and arrest of leadership figures within these purported domestic terrorist organizations. (The memo later instructs the FBI to "establish cooperators to provide information and eventually testify against other members" of the groups.)

The payouts don't end there. Justice Department grants are now to prioritize funding to programs for state and local law enforcement to go after domestic terrorism.

In a section titled "Defining the domestic terrorism threat," the memo cites "extreme viewpoints on immigration, radical gender ideology, and anti-American sentiment" — indicators that federal law enforcement are instructed to refer to FBI Joint Terrorism Task Forces (JTTFs). Those JTTFs are then instructed to "use all available investigative tools" in order to "map the full network of culpable actors involved" in both "inside and outside the United States."

The memo also directs the FBI and JTTFs to retroactively investigate incidents going back five years, authorizing the JTTFs in particular to use everything at their disposal to do so.

"Upon receipt of these referrals, the JTTFs shall use all available investigative tools, consistent with law enforcement internal policies and statutory obligations, to map the full network of culpable actors involved in the referred conduct inside and outside the United States," the memo says.

For months, major media outlets have largely blown off the story of NSPM-7, thinking it was all just Trump bluster and too crazy to be serious. But a memo like this one shows you that the administration is absolutely taking this seriously — even if the media are not — and is actively working to operationalize NSPM-7.

NSPM-7 was signed in September largely in response to the murder of Charlie Kirk, which was a 9/11-type event for the Trump administration, as I've reported. (Kirk's assassination is referenced explicitly in the Justice Department memo.) As anyone who lived through 9/11 can remember, the government doesn't always think rationally in moments like those, to say the least. And so here we are, with a new War on Terrorism — only this time, millions of Americans like you and I could be the target.

We publish documents other media won't. For more leaks and to make it so I can keep doing this work, please become a paid subscriber.

Type your email... Subscribe

Leave a comment

Share

738 Likes · 293 Restacks

♡ 738 34 293 Share

Discussion about this post

Comments Restacks

Write a comment...

Discount Gentleman 20h

♥ Liked by Ken Klippenstein

This is very aggressive and very fast. They are working to make any form of protest into a federal crime, and to reorient all national and local "law enforcement" around crushing it. The cash reward system and calls for citizens to inform on their neighbors should be terrifying to anyone with the slightest grasp of history.

I still believe their real targets are not so much the street protestors (which they believe they can mop up over time through extreme violence) but scaring away any foundations or rich people from backing any organization even remotely critical of the administration (hence the repeated references to tax law).

♡ LIKE (101) REPLY SHARE

Mike 21h

♥ Liked by Ken Klippenstein

Public Enemy #1. Ms Rachel.

♡ LIKE (61) REPLY SHARE

1 reply

32 more comments...

Top Latest Discussions

Exclusive: Luigi's Manifesto

Read the manifesto the media refused to publish

DEC 10, 2024 · KEN KLIPPENSTEIN

♡ 8,380 84 1,266

Exclusive: Leaked Messages from Charlie Kirk Assassin

Accused shooter’s “politics” is not what government and media say

SEP 16 · KEN KLIPPENSTEIN

♡ 4,240 58 753

Read the JD Vance Dossier

We’re publishing the supposed Iran-hacked document. Here’s why.

SEP 26, 2024 · KEN KLIPPENSTEIN

♡ 2,324 34 456

See all >

Ready for more?

Type your email... Subscribe

© 2025 Kenneth Klippenstein · Privacy · Terms · Collection notice

Start your Substack Get the app

Substack is the home for great culture